CONFEDERATE PERSONALS

The New York Herald gives the following allusions to the present condition and movement of ex-Confederates:

General Albert Pike, a brigadier from Arkansas, is practicing law at Washington City, with ex-Senator Johnson of Georgia, and has just repudiated his former position.

General Dick Taylor is probably the most of the Confederate generals, and is engaged in banking and other large operations in New Orleans, abetting奴兵.

General D. H. Hill keeps a school in his town of Hillsborough, and maintains also a personal publication over a weekly called The Land We Love.

Mr. Brown is fifty-five years old and is an Emeritus of Georgia. He is pretty well worth anywhere between $100,000 and $200,000—and is President of the Western and Atlantic Railroad.

Gen. Hill, ex-Confederate, is practicing law at Atlanta, and is said to be the best attorney in the State. He was a Senator of the Confederate States, and had a personal audience with Lincoln.

Ex-Senator Robert M. T. Hunter has a nice farm on the Rappahannock River in the northern part of Virginia, and is said to be despised, although his conduct is称赞 at all times and his name retains full vigor.

General Cheatham, having made an unsuccessful run for Congress against George Marshall, has retired to private life, residing now upon Andrew Johnson, who divided the Democratic vote with him.

General John C. Breckinridge lives at Lexington, Kentucky, and was given an important place at one time by the Compromises and Ohio Railroad. He shows good nature and a quiet disposition, but no great source in these respects of power.

The family of William H. Tandy reside on a farm near Montgomery, Alabama, and are in only moderate circumstances. Tandy's tomb is a small affair. It is said that two of his sons are in Brazil, where they emigrated in the close of the war.

Jeff Davis is President of the Carolina Insurance Company at Memphis, under the patronage of a Mr. Wick, whose bank recently went up when the Southern Security Company drew a check upon it for an enormous amount.

Alexander H. Stephens lives near Cartersville, Georgia, in a small and not very comfortable house, which he identifies with the name of "Liberty Hall." He is charitable, and gives away all the excess of means after providing for himself, and is writes long and abstract treatises, showing how nothing ought to be done, and what might have been the case and something else happened twelve before.

The author of the large Atlanta fire in 1864 has made a confession to a Pittsburg detective. He said the time had come when he could no longer endure the pains of remorse. During the six years that have elapsed he has been traveling with various companies, and has been untraced by Barnard's and Foreman's. On Saturday evening he was located in Atlanta, where he has resided. He is now twenty-two years of age, and says that when his term of punishment is ended he will start anew and be an honest, upright man. The dead had haunted him day and night, except when under the influence of liquor, and in consequence he had become a drunkard.
